Funeral of Baron Von Humboldt.

The solemn funeral procession of Alexander Von Humboldt moves towards the Cathederal. All that represents art and science follows the march. The marshals in their costumes, bearing the orders of the celebrated man, preceed the hearse drawn by six steeds from the royal stables. Upon the hearse rests a simple oak coffin, adorned with laurel and flowers. At the sides of the coffin, march a delegation of the university students, with palm branches in their hands; an immense suit of carriages closes the train. The prince regent, and the whole royal house expect at the cathederal the mortal remains of the great thinker. The city is wrapped in mourning. From a telegraphic dispatch of May 13., after the ceremony, the remains were removed to Tegel, eight English miles from Berlin, a country seat, formerly belonging to a brother of the deceased, and now the resting place of both, as also of the family.

On the right hand, you see a granite monument, surrounded by a beautiful statute of "Hope"; this is the resting place of Wilhelm Von Humboldt, with his family. On the left, overshadowed by foliage, is another grave, in which rests the nestor of science, the friend of Jefferson and Hamilton.

But one member of the family is remaining now, a daughtér of Wilhelm, married to General Hedemann.—German Journal.

TOBACCO STATISTICS.—Some statistical genius has collated the following in relation to the use and culture of tobacco in the old world:

The Emperor of the French is a great smoker, and his subjects emulate his example, having consumed 523,636,000 cigars during 1857. The tobacco trade is a government monopoly, and is estimated to yield a revenue the present year of $36,000,000. Algeria is rapidly advancing in tobacco culture, having increased the product from 277,000 pounds in 1848, to more than 7,000,000 in 1857. Austria and Russia, like France, make the traffic in this article a government monopoly, the former deriving a revenue of $14,000,000 from it. Russia, it is reported, intends to abolish her monopoly.

SINGULAR STAPLE OF COMMERCE.—Bugs are an important item in the trade of Rio Janerio. Their wings are made into artificial flowers, and some of the most brilliant varieties are worn as ornaments in ladies' hair. One man earns his living by selling insects and other specimens to the strangers who visit the port. He keeps twelve slaves constantly employed in finding bugs, serpents and shells which are most in demand. The nearest approach to his business that we can remember is that of the trade of fireflies in Havana; the insect being caught and carefully fed on the sugar cane, is used as an ornament in ladies' dresses. Being twice the size of an American firefly, it is very brilliant at night. The creoles catch them on the plantations and sell them to the city belles; some of them carrying them in silver cages attached to their bracelets. They make a fine display by lamplight.

From the "Home Journal."

A SINGULAR FACT.

A ROMANCE OF THE DAY.

We more than once had occasion to recur to the singular subject of the following narrative. We give the facts on account of their interest, either as a fiction—if such be possible in the case in question—or as history. The subject is the more interesting to us, as we repeatedly found Mr. Hume reported in the "Israelite," as belonging to the Hebrew race. We hope to need no further apology.

"The subject of our sketch is a young man born near Edinburgh, in March, 1833, but who was taken, at the age of nine, by his parents to America, where he spent the greater part of his subsequent life. When we state that he was, only eight years of ago, apprenticed to a humble trade in the town of Norwich, Connecticut, and has since been the favored visitor of several European courts, and was last summer married to a Russian lady, of noble birth and large fortune, and all this without the possession of any special talents, attainments, or external attractions, the curiosity of the reader will probably be thoroughly aroused regarding him. The peculiarities by which he has actually been enabled to attain so high distinctions are such as render a man an object of suspicion it is true, but the fact and circumstances of the elevation do not the less constitute a modern marvel of a kind well deserving of notice. The whole case becomes the more interesting to us, from its being strangely involved with that of a living sovereign of equally marvelous history, and the development of whose destiny is yet in the future.

Mr. Daniel D. Hume is a slender, fair-complexioned young man, with no peculiarity of appearance beyond that of extremely weak health. He has till lately had no education but that of his original grade. Obliged at seventeen, by bad health, to quit the humble trade to which he had been apprenticed, he was in some danger of destitution, his father being too poor to assist him; but it chanced at that time that a great number of people of the middle and upper classes of America, were interested in a system held by them as a new revelation of the spiritual or ultra-physical world, while condemned by the outer public as a monstrous delusion. Whether true, or partially true—true in the external facts, and only misunderstood and misnamed—or altogether moonshine and folly—certain it is that thousands of passing-shrewd people who at first regarded it in the latter light, were brought round to see something else in it, and to enter on its investigations with a portion of the ardor of the national mind. There was such a group of people at Springfield, Massachusetts, and some rich men among them. To them, Hume came, penniless and forlorn, for patronage and a livelihood, because from childhood he had possessed the gifts which qualified him to be one of those passive priests of the new temple, named in Americo "mediums"—that is, human organisms fitted to bring out the latent spiritual existencies, and enable them to hold converse with living persons. More than this, wherever Hume, was, spirits worked around him, producing the most singular mechanical results. Thus, when left at three years old to play on the carpet, and too weakly to move about, his playthings were brought to his hands by invisible means. Of things more than mortal, he had then, as the poet supposes of Shakspeare, his visions. Being thus endowed, he was eagerly received into the "circles," or investigation clubs, as they might be called, at Springfield, one gentleman named Elmer, being good enough to give a home, in which he remained about a year. "There were," says a local journal, (Springfield Republican, Nov. 1858) "great stories of the marvel he performed while here, and many of the solid men of the city had the honor of riding tables that were lifted and tumbled about by the stress of his mysterious power." Among those who came to a belief in the honest reality of these things, was a young native of Minorca, named Andreau, a printer, who in time favored the public with an account of his experiences. He professed to have been while in Hume's presence, touched with invisible hands; bells moved by invisible means round the company; and the floor and the furniture shook, as if under an earthquake. But at length Hume tired of the life he led at Springfield, and came to New York, with the design of studying medicine as a profession; and he actually entered on such a course under the care of a homœpathic physician named Gray.

A gentleman signing himself L. J. Worth, lately communicated, through a New York paper, some particulars of an experience he had had in Hume's company, in November, 1854, when "billeted" with him at the village of Ravenswood. "I proposed to Hume," he says, "to allow me to lay down with him when he went to bed, for an hour or two, as I was told that some curious manifestations might be expected." Accordingly, taking off only my coat and boots, I ensconsced myself alongside of him under the bed-clothes, first locking the door and fastening the window shutters, and ascertaining that we were the sole occupants of the room.

"Almost immediately after the light was extinguished, I heard raps all around me—on the floor, on the walls, on the head-board, on my pillow; in fact everywhere. The sounds varied in intensity from light taps on the pillow to loud, resounding blows upon the floor and walls. I asked many questions, and received intelligent answers by means of these raps. I saw also, in various parts of the room, nebulous-looking and wandering light now and then crossed by irregular shadows. Roon I felt soft and gentile touches, as if by a human hand, upon the top and face of my head followed quickly by the placing of cool moist hand upon my forehead, which I was told by means ot raps, was the hand of Hume's deceased mother. In a few moments, another spirit came, and after touching me from my feet upwards, also placed a hand upon my forehead, gently pulling and smoothing my beard, and closeing up my eyes, and then rapping out answers to many questions upon the closed lid. Still another spirit now came, and stepped upon the bed, and began walking over it, feeling to me as if a child had climbed up and was walking over us, stepping carefully over us, but not upon us, the bed-clothes being indented at each foot-fall. In a few momehts, however, the spirit lay down on the outside of the bed, and on us both, pressing with all the weight, and precisely in the same manner that a living child might have done.

"The spirit then wished me good night by the raps, and apparently departed. The whole occupied about half an hour, and during the whole time Hume and I lay upon our backs covered to the chin by the bed-clothes and touching each the entire length of our persons, from shoulders to heel; and during it all Hume did not stir in the least and made no muscular movement, other than that caused by his breathing." * *

With pecuniary means supplied by a Mr. Rymer, Hume went to Paris in July, accompanied by Mr. Rymer's son, and nominally as the young man's tutor. Some American gentlemen then took him along with them to Florence, where he spent the winter, and astonished many English residents with his marvels. Here, however, a revolution took place in his mind. He became convinced that the phenomena in America, however veritable were of a discommendable nature, in as far as they had not in general a religious aspect. The doctrines of the Catholic church, recommended to him probably by the affinity of the so-called miracles of the saints to his own mysterious gifts, were embraced by him. The priests, however, condemned the exercise of his alleged control of spirits, and he soon after announced that the power had suddenly deserted him. On the 27th of March, 1856, he was received into the Catholic church. At first, he feared that he should again be thrown destitute; but a Polish gentleman now took him up, and conducted him to Paris, where he remained for several months in low health and devoid of his former power. At length, after a year's cessation—namely, in February, 1827—it returned in all its former force, and he was speedily introduced into very high circles, not excepting that of the court. During the ensuing month, Mr. Hume and hir spirits were the reigning topic of Paris. In the presence of the Emperor, the Empress, and a very small and select party, many of the marvels previously described are alleged to have taken place, leaving impressions of mingled wonder and suspicion. The Emperor beheld all with his characteristic nonchalance, and never allowed an expression of assent to drop from his lips. It has been stated, however, that, on his saying one evening that he could not be convinced of the presence of a spirit unless he should receive from one some raps on the shoulder; immediately some hard blows were given him in that quarter. The Empress was made to lift a heavy table which at other times she could scarcely move, and such a piece of furniture was one night made to float in the air, so high that our imperial husbands' arm could scarcely reach its legs. She put her handkerchief, Spanish fashion, under her garter, and desired Hume to ask his spirits to tell where it was. Presently, it is said, she felt a pair of clammy cold hands disengaging it, and it was immediately after seen floating in the air. According to all accounts of Hume, his demeanor on these occassions was quiet and unimpassioned, the contrary of the usual conduct of a conjuror. Three gentlemen on one occasion played a trick on him, which was at first rather damaging, because it raised a laugh against him. It was suggested to him to ask the spirit of Socrates to appear, and when he obeyed, a figure like the Greek philosopher came forward and passed before the company. Frederick the Great, in like manner, was summoned, and presented himself; but Hume detecting something inappropriate, became convinced there was an imposture in both cases. At his command, the personator confessed the trick. It was unlucky for this attempt at ridicule, that the appearances presented were not of a nature that ever took place among spiritualists, or were within the alleged powers of Hume.

Early in the summer of 1857, Hume was enabled, by the liberality of Louis Napoleon, to revisit America, chiefly for the purpose of bringing a young girl, his sister, to Paris, the Empress having undertaken to have her educated. While in his native village he employed a part of the means at his disposal in purchasing a farm for his uncle. Returning in September, he was immediately telegraphed for to the court at Fontainblau, and there introduced to the King of Bavaria. Soon after, we find him at Baden-Baden, on an intimate footing with the King of Wurtemberg, and other great persons. One cannot but say that, on any theory of imposture, it is most discreditable to all these great folk that none of them have yet been able to detect it.

Not long afterwards, Hume was "impressed" to go to Rome; by which we suppose is meant that some of his invisible familiars tacitly impelled him to travel thither. Immediately on arriving, he was met by a friend, who expressed the greatest gratification in seeing him, having for some time been anxious to introduce him to a Russian family of rank, who were interested in his history. He was conducted accordingly, to the lodgings of the Count Koucheleff, where he experienced a most favorable reception, and in three weeks a marriage between him and the Count's sister was arranged. In July, 1858, he came to London, and thence to Edinburgh for the purpose of obtaining those certificates of parentage and nativity which are required for a marriage in Russia. The nuptials were celebrated on the 1st of August, at St. Petersburg, under circumstances of the highest eclat. The Emperor sent two of his aides-de-camp to be present, and gave Mr. Hume diamond ring of the value of three hundred guineas. Alexander Dumas, the celebrated novelist, made a special tour into Russia, to act as groomsman; and he has given us some account of how this was determined on. As a speimen of the man it is perfect:

"On seeing me enter, the Count and Countess Koucheleff rose, came to meet me, conducted me to an armed chair, and then sat down, one on my right, the other on my left. 'Monsieur Dumas,' said the Count to me, 'we have observed how fatigued you are, when going away at two o'clock in the morning.' 'I confess to you, Count,' I replied, 'that it quite deranges my habits.' 'Well,' said the Countess, 'henceforth, we shall suffer you to go at midnight.' 'It is very easy to say so, Countess.' 'What could I do? 'It must, howener, be attempted, but on one condition,' said the Count. 'What?' The Countess undertook to answer: 'That you come with us to St. Petersburg.' I bounded, the thing seemed to me so foolish. 'Caper, frisk,' said the Countess, 'yet we confidently expect you.' 'But it is impossible, Countess." 'How, impossible?' asked the Count. 'Undoubtedly.' 'You must set out next Tuesday —that is to say, in five days.' * * * 'Countess,' said I to her, 'I require three days to decide.' 'I give you three minutes,' said she; 'either we will refuse our sister to Monsieur Hume, or you shall be his groomsman.' I rose, went on the balcony, and deliberated. I remembered that my resolution had already been formed to set for Greece, Asia Minor, Syria, and Egypt; considered that Mazeline, the shipbuilder, demanded five months to finish our vessel; still thought that under the circumstances, nothing could be more interesting than a journey through Russia. I reflected that the readers of Monte Christo, being my especial friends, would accept what I should give them, quite certain that I would do all I possibly could not to alienate them. I thought at last all this mere madness; and this was, I much fear, the reflection which determined me. After two minutes and a half, I returned to the Countess. 'Well?' she inquired of me. 'Well, Countess,' I responded, 'I depart with you.' The Count warmly pressed my hand.—Hume embraced me. And this is how, dear readers, I set out. Behold me already at St. Petersburg."

Whether, contrary to rule, there are to be post-matrimonial chapters to this romance, remains to be seen. It is alleged that the hero undertook with his bride that there are to be no more spirit manifestations. Already, however, the engagement has been broken, for the curiosity of the Russian Court was too great to be resisted, and he is said to have given way to their desires.

JEWISH INTELLIGENCE.

VIENNA.—A few days since, the Emperor told the Archduke Governor-General of Hungary that the Hungarian Protestants should have their Provincial Synod, and that without delay. The conduct of the Hungarians is exemplary, and their loyalty towards the Emperor great, although they strongly, and with justice, disapproved the measures of the Government. Orders have been given to the Stadtholders of the different provinces not to throw difficulties in the way of those Jewish families who may wish to engage Christian servants. The news of what was intended excited the indignation of the foreign Jews in the highest degree, and led to strong demonstrations against Austria. At Frankfort, a rich stock broker got on a table after the evening 'Change, and moved that no child of Israel should do business in future in any description of Austrian stock. The motion was carried by acclamation, and the news of what had occurred duly forwarded to this city. In Amsterdam the great Hebrew firm also expressed their resolve to taboo Austrian paper, and Baron James Rothschilds, of Paris, gave instructions to his nephew in this city to wait on Count Buol, and remonstrate with him. He did so, and is said to have observed to the minister that he was a cosmopolite, and could live as well elsewhere as in Austria. The storm was blown over for the moment, but the Jesuits are a stiff-necked race, and will, doubtless, return to the charge at a more opportune moment.—N. Y. Times.

POSEN.—This city lost, some three months ago, one of her greatest Hebrew minds—Mr. Israel Weil, the last and youngest son of R. Mayer beu R. Simchah Weil, of Berlin, departed this life in the seventy-sixth year of his age. Mr. W. was known in wider circles, his acumen of mind and his perspicacity distinguished him before thousands of his fellow men. His eminent juridical knowledge was courted and admired by great jurists of Posen and abroad, and resorted to in difficult cases.

When the study of the Talmud was still cultivated at Posen, Mr. Weil occupied the first rank among the disputants.

BRESLAU.—The society for giving dowries to needy girls, counts 250 members; every member pays the moderate sum of three silver groschen (about seven cents) a month. Formerly, brides used to get from fifty to one hundred Prussian dollars; but then the society counted about five hundred members; now, brides get from thirty to sixty thalers. However, the present administration (being a number of years in office) has received and expended about ten thousand dollars.

BRESLAU.—JEWISH SCHOOL TEACHERS.—Of sixteen candidates for the school department who were examined last February at the Roman Catholic Seminary of Breslau, three graduated as rectors; of the latter, two were Israelites, and of the former (of teachers) no less than five.

Jewish Agriculturists and Stock Raisers.

We, on former occasions, showed creditable statistics, proving that our people now fall on every calling from which a narrow policy and want of security does not debar them. We have contradicted the general report that Jews are no agriculturists, by showing that in Luthania, whole villages are inhabited by Jewish agriculturists and horticulturists; that these villages bear even Jewish names; we also reported that drainage on the Adriatic coast by Israelites has redeemed thousands of acres of land; that Mr. Bergtheil, in Natal (Africa) is the prop of a whole colony.

Nor is California behind hand. Jewish rancheros are to be met with very frequently. There are some in this city and across the bay; some six or seven, at and around Sacramento. REMEMBERING THE POOR.

75,000 Franks.

We give the following list from "Les Arche Isr. of April, in illustration of our editorial. We see that the family of Rothschild was mindful of the good old-fashion custom: the poor are clad and fed, a poor orphan receives her dowry, and the charitable institutions are remembered. Large as the amount appears, there is but little doubt but double the amount was spent to charities of a different kind. We give the sums that are specified:

"On occasion of the nuptials of Gustave of Rothschild, the family gave an order for 18,000 francs to be distributed in twelve wards of Paris; another to the officers of the Synagogue for 20,000 frcs; to the Hospital, 800 frcs; to the committee of Benevolence, 6,000 frcs; to the Nathaniel Institute, 4,000 frcs; to the Orphan House, 4,000 frcs; dowry to an orphan girl, 1500 frcs; Mechanics Association, 1000 frcs; clothing and entertaining orphans and aged men (probably for the occasion) 2500 frcs. Total, 75,000 franks.

MARRIAGE CUSTOMS.

REMEMBERING THE POOR.—There was a time—and in countries where civilization has not effaced so many of our Patriarchal traits, such a time continues still, when no act of life would be performed without sanctifying it by some religious symbol (sign); and no important change was allowed to pass in the family without our substantially showing that we are actually what we claimed to have been, "a kingdom of priests and a holy nation."

From the cradle to the grave, our lives were one tissue of symbolic acts: our rising and lying down our fasts and our feast, our poverty and our riches, our adversity and prosperity were all sanctified by acts of religion and substantial charities. No Hebrew would taste a drop of water without giving thanks before tasting it, nor would he break bread without pronouncing a blessing before, and grace after it.

As to acts of benevolence to the poor, we have known men, who, conscientiously devoted the tenth part of all their earnings to immediate acts of beneficence. On the Sabbath and holy-days, few houses were without some poor at the table—and they were looked upon as god-sends; the greatest deference was paid to them. In some cities, several hundred poor would be provided for by inviting them home from the synagogue, entertain them over the holy-day, and supply them with a viaticum on their leaving, the following day. Near the synagogue was a building especially prepared for the entertainment of the poor. Man being an imitative being, he copies from those round him: the convents fed the hungry, and the synagogue supported her poor. Besides the poor, every city had her talmudical students to support; their number was very considerable. And if charity was extended to the poor, hospitality was showed to strangers who were not in want of charity; but whose hearts might have been yearning for sympathy, and brotherly love in a strange land. The posterity of Abraham, it seemed, imitated Abraham: they invited the stranger, entertained him, and thought themselves obliged at having the guest at their table. We were a charitable, hospitable, and a truly patriarchal people. And, we hope, to be such still. It is but ten years ago, when we visited on a Sabbath day the Duke's Place synagogue, of London. After the ceremonies were over, two worthy gentlemen (Mr. Meyer, the baal Koreh Reader; and Mr. A. Levy, the Dayan,) came up to us, gave us a Shalom, (salutation) and, though unknown to them, both invited us home to their house. We accepted the invitation of the gentleman who was prior in his attention, and we soon felt the connecting power of religion.

Such was done on ordinary occasions. What blessing did we bring into our houses by spreading blessings to others,—what examples of devotion, obedience and love to a higher power did the father hold up before his child on extraordinary occasions! at births, marriages and deaths.

It was not a lavish on vanity, gourmandie, sin, folly to which we brought sacrifices. It was not the invitation to feed those who were not hungry, or to lavishing drink in profusion on those who have plenty to provide for themselves, and who would have been better without it. No, our celebrations, as our lives bore a religious sanctifying character; no ceremony was performed without having the poor at the house with the rich; the former partook of the meal—which was a treat to them, and they received pecuniary assistance besides to rejoice at home. Israel knew nothing of keeping table tike heathens without a blessing, without grace and without our poor. We had no idea of mere animal gratification; at meals, Israel did not say "let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we must die." They knew how to prepare for life. We once at Berlin were present at a wedding of a very humble couple; we found there one of the Dayanim (rabbinical assessors) with his spouse, then an invalid. On intimating that we thought the presence of that lady rather unexpected, she answered, I well remember the day when the parents of the bride-groom were led under the Huppah, under quite different circumrtances. Their affluence giving them reasons to suppose an unusual throng of poor would come to the wedding, so that they and the relatives could not all be accommodated on one day, a separate day was set aside for the indigent, who were invited to come to be entertained and relieved. To show that this act of necessity was not intended as a slight, the bride and bride-groom had to wait on the guests, and the money was distributed to the poor, from, or by aprons. And, in consideration of such piety in the parents, and the present reverse in the children, the lady with her worthy spouse came to honor the couple by their presence.

Our readers must make allowance for the custom of the country; we merely hold up the principle without insinuating that the method could not be improved upon, of the two cases in illustration in our columns, we find the family of the Rothschild in Paris treating the poor in a more convenient, though not less charitable manner.

But was it merely food and a pittance that was bestowed upon the poor? No, there are number of cases to this day, that a rich man would, with his own daughter, provide marriage portions, and ample ones, for the daughter of some poor man or some orphan, as will be illustrated by an instance in our columns.

But it is not the Rothschild's only that act thus. There are hundreds of our people in this country who, were they to contribute their quantum of information of similar cases, of less wealthy families, they could furnish material for a volume.

Such is the influence of religion; it elevates man and endows him with a heroism and generosity which is proof against temptation and misfortune.

We ascribe the cultivation of the charitable affections mainly to the influence of religion—for acts recorded in this article are not the creation of the worldly or ungodly. We have Jewish, Christian and Mahometan charities; but never did we hear of pantheistic or atheistic charitable institutions.

Jewish Belletristic Writers.

"Der Wahlspruch," a comedy by Berthold Auerbach, was lately acted with considerable success on the stage of Weimar, in the presence of the Court. Mr. Lederer is an excellent humorist. Wilhelm Wolffsohn lectures before a very numerous audience on Schillers Dramas. Dr. David Ascher of Dresden, wrote lately a comment on Goethe's Faust. Hermann Hersch, finished, some months ago "Anna Liese, in which, before the denouement, every character acts diametrically in opposition to what he intended to act at the beginning. The "Kladderedatsch," was started and managed by Jews.

The New Cemetery.

Some few months ago, the Eureka Society,

The cemetery of '49 is the reflex of the city of '49; small, rugged, desolate, though ornamented. And those who thought either on account of the living or the dead, a more proper Hebrew burial ground ought to have supplied the place of the old one; longed talked about the propriety of an improvement by the purchase of a piece of ground, in a more proper locality and of proper dimensions. The subject has been discussed some years ago by the "Voice of Israel" but nothing was done in the matter till combined with the Synagogue Emanuel, appropriated each, two thousand dollars, for the purpose of the purchase of an eligible site for a burial ground. Committees were appointed; but they did not succeed in procuring a plot, on account of the difficulty to find a spot whose titles one day or other might not be disputed. They at last succeeded, and a site for a new Cemetery has been purchased in the vicinity of the Mission Dolores. It is a lot of eleven acres, located on the road from the Mission to San Souci, or rather what is at present known as the Hermitage. The property is known on the map as Block 85, bounded by Dolores, Church, Falcon and Eagle streets, and a portion of an adjoining square. The [illegible] Block 86 is to be properly enclosed; [illegible] metery is to be laid out in lots, with [illegible] roadways.

Veneration for the Dead.

Anxiety respecting the appearance [illegible] posal of our remains, seems to be an [illegible] quality of man. When the time drew [illegible] that Israel should die, and he called [illegible] Joseph, and said to him, "If I have [illegible] grace in thy sight, put, I pray thee, thy [illegible] under my thigh (this was an ancient [illegible] making oath) and deal kindly and truly [illegible] me: I pray thee bury me not in Egypt, [illegible] I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt [illegible] ry me out of Egypt and bury me in [illegible] burying place. Genes. 47: 29: 30. [illegible] spoke Jacob; and Joseph said to his [illegible] ers, "I die: and God will surely visit [illegible] member) you, and ye shall carry my [illegible] hence:" ib. 50: 25: many prisoners [illegible] lost, in this city, paid with his life the [illegible] of his crime, shrunk at the idea of the [illegible] ing knife. Here, as elsewhere, it was [illegible] ministry of religion that relieved him [illegible] distress and furnished him a decent [illegible] was his clerical that bore the [illegible] "Aim at the heart, and spare the face," [illegible] claimed the splendid Murat, as he fell. [illegible] throw me overboard—kiss me Hardy," [illegible] among the last words of the dying [illegible] Indeed, to die "decently," and have [illegible] marble on our graves, is among our [illegible] sires. "Man is a noble animal," says [illegible] certain writer, "splendid in ashes, [illegible] pous in the grave." It is this which [illegible] guishes us, in a measure, from the brute [illegible] perish. In this respect, every man is [illegible] of Cheops!

The veriest peasant, who has been [illegible] only with his cottage-home—whose [illegible] dent desires have hardly wandered from [illegible] of straw, at the hour of death, has [illegible] known to be even scrupulous in choosing [illegible] final bed beneath the green turf of his [illegible] valley; and how often does the poet, [illegible] ters the vale of years, choose for his [illegible] ing-place, some loved spot,—some spot [illegible] dear to him by a thousand recollections. [illegible] choice, perhaps, is by the bank of some [illegible] stream, or the sea shore, where the blue [illegible] may greet him in his last repose, and where [illegible] may for ever listen to the peans of a race [illegible] God. Imagination casts her charms [illegible] his chosen grave, and he dreams not of [illegible] beetle or the worm. The great Cæsar, [illegible] he might die 'decently,' adjusted his [illegible] while falling at the base of Pompey's [illegible] It seems as if he felt to imitate the [illegible] sun, as he enfolds himself in the drapery [illegible] evening sky.

And if Cæsar was thus actuated, [illegible] untutored Indian. Shategaronnah, a [illegible] dot chief, we are told, was ordered to [illegible] to death. The messengers finding the [illegible] warrior, commenced digging his grave [illegible] side of his wigwam. Entreaty was [illegible] dressing himself in his best war cloths, [illegible] taking a meal of venison, he prepared [illegible]

The rich of earth, to cheat the worm [illegible] censure respect, spare no expense. [illegible] coffin must be had. There must be a [illegible] sion of crape, and gold must swell the [illegible] splendid woe. Monuments must pierce [illegible] heavens, and mourners go about the [illegible] because a "man has gone to his long [illegible]

We all expect some one to praise our [illegible] and extol our virtues, while the wide [illegible] of charity is to cover our weakness [illegible] faults. With melancholy fondness, we [illegible] our grave to be decent, our coffin [illegible] and our last tunic clean and white. [illegible] we please ourselves with the thought [illegible] cherished friend fondly embracing our [illegible] urns, and dropping the mournful, [illegible] Consoling thought! Oh! could we [illegible] ed, in our last moments, that our friends [illegible] remember us—that the violet on our [illegible] would not make its appeal in vain—[illegible] tear of grief would sometimes flow for [illegible] parture, how would this assurance deaden [illegible] pang of death! how would it ease our [illegible] pillows! Imaginary as this may be, [illegible] theless it is a suggestion of our [illegible] suggestion which has its birth in the [illegible] both of the aged and the young. And [illegible] are all, both old and young, thus cheered [illegible] the idea of tributes of respect, [illegible] none who can endure the thought of [illegible] their remains insulted after death. "[illegible] me not to the jeers of the populace!" [illegible] last request of a dying Emperor. It is [illegible] ally the request of all. Man shrinks [illegible] tively from the thought of posthumous [illegible] sult.

It is this which lends half the agony [illegible] death-bed of the his soul. Governments [illegible] well aware of this effect, and, indeed, [illegible] influence upon the living person, of [illegible] of any indignity offered to his remains. [illegible] many years since, I have somewhere read [illegible] Parisians seemed determined upon the [illegible] destruction. Half Paris appeared also [illegible] mmit suicide, and the other half were eager find a preventative. Finally, a law was ssed, that the body of a suicide should be agged naked through the street. The law ceded but to be executed ere the desired ef- ct was produced. The fine feelings of the risians recoiled at the idea, while the cold, sty remarks of a gazing populace—"what s! what a face he had!" chilled their very od with horror.

It is true that their bodies, when dead, are ke unknowing of kindness or of wrong; but se kindnesses or wrongs which we expe- nce this side the tomb, we imagine will eer or pain us beyond it. Why should ten- rness cease where the empire of the grave gins? Passing strange if it must be so! e thing there is of which I have often ought. Who that can tread upon the grave, en of a stranger, without experiencing those bbing sensations, which ever follow upon fering insult to one who is helpless? The jury recoils upon ourselves. It drinks half own poison. We sympathize with the in- red dead. We lay ourselves with n our nar- w home, and fancying the intruder's unfeel- g tread, we realized full deeply the sacred- ss of the motto—"Peace be with his ashes!" In consideration of the above, I have often ought it a most repulsive feature in the pro- sion of an antiquary—his willingness to rob en the sepulchre, if the ornaments and lach- mary vases therein concealed, will tend to nzon his name, or gratify his unhallowed and atiable curiosity. Not only the temples of gods must suffer pillage to enrich a cabi- , but search must be made among the very es of the dead. Far different must be the ling which would prompt to such an action, m that which would lead us, as we behold sculptured marble, or the more modest ve, to pause and pay the accustomed tri- te of respect; and indeed, how few are they o can pass on. Why is this? Why do r feelings demand of us to pay to the dead tribute of respect, or the charity of our si- ce? Why? unless it be that we will soon, our turn, make the same demand of our rviving fellows? It is then but the golden le, that we should venerate the dead. And, ! why not? Heaven grant that my grave, d the graves of those I love, may be cast in me sunny spot—

"Where, like an infant's smile, over the dead,
A light of laughing flowers along the grass is spread."

BATHING.

THE WARM BATH.

Our readers will have learnt from the dailies an accident that happened last week to a ild that went to bathe in a water not above een inches deep. Left alone but a short ne, it was found drowned. Our papers think e death mysterious.

We will not be presuming, but a death like is is accountable by paralisis, or by a termi- ation of the blood to the head. Therefore e warn. In going into the cold water submerge e whole body at once; so that the cold is quable, and that the blood do not rush to the rain; never enter a bath earlier than three to our hours after your meals, and never when our system is exhausted, or when the body is a violent perspiration. The child probably ll a victim to its ignorance of one or the ther of these rules. We now continue:

Warm Baths.—For general use, the tepid r warm bath seems to me, says Combe, much ore suitable than the cold bath, especially in winter, and for those who are not robust and ull of animal heat. Where the constitution not sufficiently vigorous to secure reaction fter the cold bath, as indicated by a warm low over the surface, its use inevitably does arm. A vast number of persons are in this ondition; while, on the contrary, there are ew indeed who do not derive evident advan- age from the general use of the tepid bath, nd still fewer who are hurt by it.

Many imagine the tepid and warm bath to e weakening, but experience shows that they re so only when abused. When not too warm, and not prolonged beyond 15 or 20 inutes, the tepid may be employed daily with erfect safety and advantage by persons in ealth; while invalids, whose condition re- quires its use, are often strengthened by a much onger and equally frequent immersion. I have seen it resorted to for an hour daily, for months in succession, by nervous invalids, with much benefit to health and strength; and in France it is employed to a much greater extent. At the vast hospital of Salpetriere at Paris, and also at Charenton, M. Esquirol has, for many years, directed it to be exten- sively used for two, three, and even five or six hours a day, and with excellent effect. When used with ordinary prudence, it is a safe and luable remedy: and that, in reality, it failed to do good in some cases more from the patient remaining in it too short a time, than from its want of power to relieve.

Vapor Baths.—The use of vapor baths is attended by the very best effects, particularly where the water-bath is felt to be oppressive by its weight, and in chronic ailments; and there can be no question that their action is chiefly on the skin, and through its medium on the nervous system. As a means of determining to the surface, promoting cutaneous exhalation, and equalizing the circulation, they are second to no remedy now in use; and consequently, in a variety of affections which the encouragement of these processes is calculated to relieve, they may be employed with every prospect of advantage. The prevalent fear of catching cold, which deters many from using the vapour-bath, even more than from warm bathing, is founded on a false analogy between its effects and those of profuse perspiration from exercise or illness. The latter weakens the body, and, by diminish ng the power of reaction, renders it susceptible of injury from sudden changes of temperature. But the effect of the vapour-bath properly administered is very different. When not too warm or too long continued, it increases instead of exhausting the strength, and, by exciting the vital action of the skin, gives rise to the power of reaction which enables it to resist cold better than before. This I have heard many patients remark; and the fact is well exemplified in Russia and the north of Europe, where, in the depth of winter, it is not uncommon for the natives to rush out of a vapour-bath and roll themselves in the snow, and be refreshed by doing so; whereas, were they to attempt such a practice, after severe perspiration from exercise, they would inevitably suffer. It is, the previous stimulus given to the skin by the vapour-bath which is the real safeguard against the coldness of the snow.

The vapour-bath is thus calculated to be extensively useful, both as a preservative and as a remedial agent. Many a cold and many a rheumatic attack arising from checked perspiration or long exposure to the weather, might be nipped in the bud by its timely use. In chronic affections, not only of the skin itself, but of the internal organs with which the skin sympathizes most closely, as the stomach and intestines, the judicious application of the vapour-bath is productive of great relief. Even in chronic pulmonary complaints, it is, according to the continental physicians, not only safe, but very serviceable: particularly in those affections of the mucous membrane which resemble consumption in so many of their symptoms. Like all powerful remedies, however, the vapour-bath must be administered with proper regard to the condition and circumstances of the individual; and care must be taken to have the feet sufficiently warm during its use. If, from an irregular distribution of the steam, the feet be left cold health and flushing are almost sure to follow.

The Vapour-Bath is also Influential.—As a preservative, too, it is influential. In most nervous ailments, languor and inaction of the skin show themselves simultaneously with the earliest dawn of mental uneasiness, and often attract notice before the morbid feelings of the mind have acquired either permanence or strength. At this early period, the use of the bath will frequently prove very efficacious in restoring health.

Strange Taste.—Jane Whipple, alias Oregon Jenny, a woman of the town, was arrested last Sunday, for inebriation. When taken to the station house it was found that she had on her person a big snake of the adder species, which she persisted in retaining, saying that it wa- her pet, and that she had had it for thirs teen months. She would entwine it around her arms, neck and person, place its head in her mouth and fondle it as any one would a pet dog. Such taste for reptiles is seldom met with.—Daily News.

Special Notices

Shochat.

Mr. Benzion Rosenthal, a gentleman highly respected in this city, in the small circle of his acquaintances, has, for a number of years, performed the function of Shochet in several congregations of Europe.

His certificates from the different Rabbis, all speak in such terms of his character, as bespeak him always to have been able to secure the respect of those who know how to appreciate and to respect character.

Being desirous to perform the function of Shochat in this city, Mr. Rosenthal evinced, last Sunday, the 5th, at our office, in the presence of a several of gentlemen whom he invited to be present, his thorough familiarity with the Dinim required to be known to Shochtim—he also proved himself an adept in the mechanical portion of the functions required for his office, in a more than ordinary degree.

Considering the high moral qualifications as also the practical and ritual proficiency of Mr. Rosenthal, we think him a gentleman highly deserving of the confidence to be reposed in him as Shochet.

Julius Eckman.

Address, Dr. L. J. CZAPKAY, San Francisco.

The following letter which emphatically speaks for itself, was written by the Dean of the Faculty of the Philadelphia College of Medicine—to the editors of the Pacific Medical and Surgical Journal, San Francisco, for publication:

Philadelphia, January 17th, 1859.

To the editors of the Pacific Medical and Surgical Journal—Gentlemen: My attention has been called to an article in the December number of your journal, in regard to the ad eundem degree granted by the Philadelphia College of Medicine to Dr. L. J. Czapkay. When the application of the degree was made to the Faculty, it was accompanied by affidavits and testimonials to the effect that Dr. Czapkay was a regular graduate M D of the University of Pesth, had served as a surgeon in the Hungarian army and was a regular practitioner of medicine. On the strength of these, the degree was granted. The ad eundem degree, as its name implies, is conferred on graduates only, and gives us new privileges. Had there been the slightest suspicion of irregularity, the application would have been refused. By inserting this in your journal you will do an act of justice to the College, and confer a favor on

Yours, very respectfully.
H. RAND,
Dean of the Faculty of the Philadelphia College of Medicine.

Dr. L. J. CZAPKAY'S PRIVATE MEDIcal and Surgical Institute is on Sacramento street, below Montgomery, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's Office, San Francisco. The Doctor offers free consultation, and asks no remuneration unless he effects a cure.

CERTIFICATE.—I, the undersigned, Governor of Hungary, do testify hereby, that Dr. L. J. Czapkay has served during the contest for Hungarian liberty, as Chief Surgeon in the Hungarian army, with faithful perseverance. Whereof I have given to him this certificate, and do recommend him to the sympathy, attention and protection of all those who are capable of appreciating patriotic self-sacrifice, and undeserved misfortune.

KOSSUTH LAJOS,
Governor of Hungary.

The Family.

The Mother's Grave.

Ah! it is a sad thing to lose a mother, children. It is only when your mother will be laid beneath the cold sod of the grave-yard, that you will feel her worth, and know that no person can fill her place. Mrs. Lovechild died, leaving two children. Mary was ten years old; Henry was only three years old, The little children cried very much when their mother died. Mary, more than Henry; for though she was a good girl generally, she sometimes had grieved her dear mother by not obeying her, and it almost broke poor Mary's heart now to think that she had not always obeyed. She never felt it so bad as she did when her mother was dead, and it was too late to make old faults good again. Many children, one day, will feel like Mary. Soon after, Mary took her little brother and went to the church-yard, to see her mother's grave. It was spring time, and the flowers were growing among the grass around the new-made mound. Mary sat down by the tombstone, and took her little brother in her arms; for when he was told that he was sitting on his mother's gave he began to cry. His sister then told him that his mother's spirit was in heaven, where he would go if he was a good boy; and he became quiet. Mary often went to her mother's grave, and she had it covered with beautiful flowers.

The Fight in the Barn-yard.

"NEVER GIVE A KICK FOR A HIT."

"I learned a good lesson when I was a little girl," says a lady. "One frosty morning I was looking out of the window into my father's barn-yard, where stood many cows, oxen, and horses, waiting to drink. It was a cold morning. The cattle all stood very still and meek, till one of the cows attempted to turn round. In making the attempt, she happened to hit her next neighbor; whereupon the neighbor kicked and hit another. In five minutes the whole herd were kicking each other with fury. My mother laughed and said, 'See what comes of kicking when you are hit. Just so, I have seen one cross word set a whole family by the ears some frosty morning.' Afterwards, if my brothers or myself were a little cross, she would say, 'Take care, my dear children. Remember how the fight in the barn-yard began. Never give back a kick for a hit, and you will save yourself and others a great deal of trouble.'"

A SERMON UPON MAN.—Who preached that men were only monkeys, who had rubbed off their tails? I wish I had his bust—I would give it the place of honor in my house. By Jove! I believe we are all Gorillas; and Owen knows it, but it is too polite to say so. After, I don't know how many thousand years, and I don't care, but we'll take the orthodox six, and say that after six thousand years of working, fighting, thinking, worshipping—of Shasters, and Korans, and Bibles—of kings, and priests, and parliaments, and republics—of sermons, and books, and newspapers—of marchings of Intellect and counter-marchings of religion—of altars, and temples, and churches, and chapels—in a word, after six thousand years of learning how to live, what have we come to? The whole of the most civilized, the most intellectual, the most religious part of the globe, is content to leave it to the decision of one bad man whether half a dozen countries shall be devastated with fire and sword, thousands of their noblest and best shall be slaughtered, and their wives and mothers sent mourning to their graves. And Man holds up his head, and talks of being the image of his Creator: I tell you we are idiotic Gorillas, and shall be dug up by the next race that inhabits this planet, and shown in their Museums, with our swords, pens, and prayer books, in glass cases, illustrating the monkey specimens.—Shirley.

THE MAN WHO HIGGLES.—There are some half-caste children living in Sidney; and these semi-barbarous as they are, appear to have caught the smartness of their white compeers. There was one who used to sell oranges on the Circular Quay; and it was highly amusing to mark the easy way in which he would rid himself of a troublesome customer. One day, a slim exquisite, with an elegantly-dressed young lady hanging on his arm, was tormenting the little black as he chaffered for some fruit. The boy kept his temper for a time, but at length broke into a passion. "You fellow, gentleman! You gentleman, want three oranges for twopence? why"—and he tossed up his burnt-sienna chin—"my mudder eat many better fellow than you for breakfeast!"—Fowlers life n Australia.

A jealous man's horns hang in his eye.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.—The possible destiny of the United States of America—as a nation of 100,000,000, freemen—stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, living under the laws of Alfred, and speaking the language of Shakspeare and Milton, is an august conception. Why should we not wish to see it realised? America would then be England, viewed through a solar microscope—Great Britain in a state of glorious magnificence! How deeply to be lamented is the spirit of hostility and sneering which some of the popular books of travels have shown in treating of the Americans! They hate us no doubt, just as brothers hate, but they respect the opinion of an Englishman concerning themselves ten times as much as that of a native of any other country on earth. A very little humouring of their predjudices, and some courtesy of language and demeanor on the part of Englishmen, would work wonders, even as it is, with the public mind of the Americans.—Coleridge's Table Talk.

CHINESE BARBERS.—The barbers, in the town of China, go about ringing bells to get customers. They carry with them a stool, a basin, a towel, and a pot containing fire. When any person calls them, they run to him; and, planting their stool in a convenient place in the street, shave the head, clean the years, dress the eyebrows, and brush the shoulders;—all for the value of little more than a halfpenny. They then ring the bell again, and start in pursuit of another customer.

FALLIBILITY OF DOCTORS.—Both Pearson and Clive, on one occasion informed Tooke that he could not possibly survive beyond a single day; and—he lived years! Let me mention here what was told me by a lady at Clifton. "In my girlhood I had a very severe illness, during which I heard Dr. Turton declare to my mother in the next room, that I could not live. I immediately called out: 'But I will live, Dr. Turton!' and here I am now sixty years old."—Rogers.

WHEN vice is united to fortune, she changes her name.

A broker in Boston, deeply absorbed in speculation, being asked, one morning, "How do you do?" replied, abruptly, "About two per cent. a month.

YOUNG physicians find it hard to get into business; but they will succeed, if they only have patients.

A poor widow was asked how she became so much attached to a certain neighbor, and replied, that she was bound to him by several cords of wood, which he had sent to her during a hard winter.
